Can you hear the seeds be-neath the earth get - tin' rea - dy for a brand new birth?

Can you hear the seeds be-neath the earth get - tin' rea - dy for a brand new birth?

Wa - ter ter

sun - shine sun shine

1. 2.

sun - shine sun shine

This little song came from daydreaming about spring and yearning for it to arrive even though it was a cold day in December. I guess it aims to express that almost tangible sense of joy of the awakening life - the way you almost feel you can hear the seeds waking up and pushing forth new growth. The 'sunshine' and 'water' ostinatos remind us of the key ingredients that enable that growth.
